Dear Hiring Team,

I am applying for an entry-level consulting role because I am motivated by work that combines analytical problem solving with a strong understanding of sector context. I am particularly interested in environments where industry expertise, regulatory knowledge, and value chain insight help shape better strategic decisions for clients.

Through my studies and experience in advisory and public-sector settings, I have developed a strong interest in how regulation, stakeholder landscapes, and commercial realities interact. I enjoy understanding the broader context around a business challenge and translating it into structured analyses that can support decision-making and execution.

My experience has given me exposure to both financial services and energy-related topics, and in both contexts I have found it motivating to work at the intersection of sector dynamics and strategy. I am especially interested in roles where domain-specific understanding strengthens the relevance and practicality of advisory work.

I would bring curiosity, strong written communication, and a disciplined analytical approach, along with genuine motivation to build deeper industry expertise over time. I would welcome the opportunity to contribute to a team working with strategy and transformation through a sector-focused lens.

Kind regards,

Sara Winther
