Dear Netcompany,

I am writing to apply for the Associate Consultant position within Application Services at Netcompany. I am currently pursuing a Master's degree in Information Technology, Communication and Organization at Aarhus University and will be relocating to Copenhagen this summer. I am motivated by the intersection of technology and business, particularly in roles where IT solutions are developed and implemented to create tangible value.

Through my ongoing master's thesis in collaboration with Accenture, I am developing an AI-based prototype that augments and optimizes internal processes. This has strengthened my interest in developing technical solutions and given me hands-on experience working with structured data and translating requirements into functional outputs. It has also provided insight into how technical solutions must be designed with usability and real-world application in mind.

In my current role at JYSK within Digital Marketing Operations, I have developed and implemented a use case that has been rolled out across 29 international markets. This involved identifying a business need, designing and building the solution, and ensuring successful implementation across diverse stakeholders. Through this, I have gained hands-on experience working with process optimization, automation, and ensuring that solutions are not only developed but also effectively implemented and used in practice.

Alongside this, I have developed a solid technical foundation through my studies, including experience with Python, SQL, and JavaScript, as well as working with system development and prototyping. I am motivated to further strengthen my technical skill set and apply it in a professional setting, and I am particularly interested in developing my competencies within project management and working with modern technologies and frameworks.

What particularly attracts me to Netcompany is the opportunity to work closely with both development and implementation of IT solutions in a highly professional environment. I am motivated by the opportunity to take responsibility early, develop through hands-on experience on client projects, and continuously improve my technical and consulting skills. I thrive in fast paced environments where responsibility and continuous learning are key, and I actively seek out challenges that accelerate my development.

Through my international experience, I have developed the ability to adapt quickly, collaborate across teams, and communicate effectively in diverse environments.

Thank you for your consideration. I look forward to the opportunity to contribute to Netcompany and develop further within a technically strong consulting environment.

Kind Regards

Thea Skovbjerg Frost
